ABSTRACT

This bibliography focuses on the people of Appalachia and their social issues and concerns. It includes scholarly research on social issues about Appalachian people published since the 1980 edition of the "Appalachian Bibliography." Material is arranged according to subject matter. Bibliographies, general references, and periodicals provide an overview of the region. Materials are also collected under headings on attitudes, child care, children and youth, class, coal miners, community organization, death and funerals, demographics and population, economic conditions and development, education (adults, dropouts, and literacy), the elderly, employment, family, geography and land, health, housing, identity and stereotypes, language, mental health, migration, politics, poverty, race and racial issues, religion, social history, social services, society and culture, and women. A directory of Appalachian organizations and an index of authors is included. This bibliography contains about 450 entries. (DHP/Author)

PREFACE

PURPOSE

The original intent of this bibliography was to provide an updated reading list on the Appalachian region and its people for the users of the Ohio State University Social Work Library. As literature was collected, it became apparent that much of the relevant literature was to not to be found readily, but as book chapters and research reports of regional organizations and non-traditional publishers. The result was that the gathering of this material actually became a collection development effort for the library.

The bibliography focuses on the people of Appalachia, and their social issues and concerns. It was determined that a subject classification arrangement would provide the easiest means of use, although this sometimes forced difficult choices for placement of entries. Valuable citations may be found under related headings and general works as well.

SCOPE

This bibliography includes scholarly social research on social issues about Appalachian people. Citations were derived by searching the following indexes and databases:

Psychological Abstracts
Social Work Research and Abstracts
Sociological Abstracts
Public Affairs Information Service (PAIS)
ERIC (Educational Resources Information Center)
Dissertation Abstracts
OCLC
Subject Guide to Books in Print

Additionally, many of the documents themselves cited other works, leading down a seemingly never-ending path. Scholarly papers in journals, books and conference proceedings were included. Dissertations were also included, although the dissertations themselves were not examined in every case if other verification existed.

A list of regional serial publications is identified so that readers can go directly to these rich sources of information in the future. A list of organizations is provided that might also direct readers to ongoing sources for further information.

Many interesting publications about the rural South and individual states within the region were excluded in order to maintain the regional focus, as were juvenile and travel literature, non-print material, and newspaper stories. Information about natural resources was limited to that which was found to have an impact on society. Many interesting personal narratives, descriptions of local interest and creative writing pieces exist, and as a compiler I learned that much insight into the people may be gleaned from this material. Space limitations and the scholarly orientation of the bibliography made the inclusion of this type of material impossible, however.

A decision was made not to annotate the bibliography to maximize the number of citations provided. The classified arrangement provides subject access and minor notes clarify acronyms or special physical attributes of the piece.

COVERAGE

The bibliography provides access to material published since the 1980 edition of the Appalachian Bibliography produced by the West Virginia University Library, Morgantown, West Virginia. It should be noted that to update that source, they also publish Appalachian Outlook, a triannual supplement which is not cumulated.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This project would not have been possible without the diligence of Nancy Helmick. It was her work in word processing and editing the manuscript that made the idea come to fruition. She deserves many thanks for her skills and patience.

Others deserving of special mention for this work include Dean Richard Boettcher of the College of Social Work, the Interlibrary Loan Department for their processing of my many requests and Steve Rogers from Information Services for his role as a microcomputer resource person.
